ABSTRACT

This guide to information sources on refugees covers indexes, abstracts, bibliographies, periodicals, and resource and research centers. The guide begins with a discussion of recent developments in the bibliographic control of the literature on refugees, and particularly the work of the International Refugee Integration Resource Center. It then lists and comments on useful indexes and abstracts, both those searchable by computer and those in paper form, and discusses the value and methodology of computer searches of the literature. A listing of bibliographies follows, divided into sections on general bibliographies and bibliographies on: resettlement in the United States and Canada, teaching English as a second language, and bilingual/bicultural education. The bibliographies are primarily those published since 1980, although all bibliographies for the ERIC database have been included, regardless of date. The final two sections give listings for periodicals and resource and research centers, with some annotations. Examples of index postings accompany the paper. (CMG)

Thanks are due to Diana Zimmerman, Center for Migration Studies, and Rosemary Tripp, U.S. Committee for Refugees, for their assistance in identifying resource and research centers.

Although the plight of refugees has become the focus of heightened concern among humanitarian organizations and scholars in recent years, due to the rapid growth in the world's refugee population, much information on refugees has remained elusive, even fugitive. The lack of bibliographic control of the literature on refugees is partly due to the rapid growth of this literature but also perhaps to a failure to comprehend the magnitude of the subject as an area of inquiry. For example, many periodical indexes and abstracts do not employ the term "refugees" in their subject indexes, while several significant periodicals about refugees remain unindexed. Standard reference directories which might identify organizations concerned with refugees do not index under the term "refugees" either, instead using broader subject entries such as "migration", "population", "demography", and the like. Where is the researcher to turn? Can research on refugees be accomplished without spending hours determining the best sources to consult?

The purpose of this paper is to identify sources fruitful for research on refugees. Coverage will include indexes and abstracts; recent bibliographies; periodicals; and resource and research centers. Based on the information in this paper, the scholar should be able to carry out a systematic, productive investigation on refugees in any medium to large-sized academic library in the United States, and then pinpoint sites for further study both at home and abroad.

I am going to begin with a discussion of recent developments in the bibliographic control of the literature on refugees. The International Refugee Integration Resource Center (IRIRC) in Geneva has been instrumental in attempting to accomplish this task. Established in 1981 out of the workshop on the Integration of Refugees from Indochina, October, 1980, the IRIRC is jointly sponsored by the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration and the International Council of Voluntary Agencies. The organization aims to gather everything written on refugees, whether published or not, and build an online computerized database accessible from external locations. Publications of the Center include Refugee Abstracts, a quarterly which first appeared in March, 1982, and the IRIRC International Bibliography of Refugee Literature, 1984. Planned are a directory of refugee assistance organizations, a thesaurus of refugee terminology, and a computerized database of experts on refugee integration and resettlement. These publications may become part of a joint effort between the IRIRC and other documentation centers.

In mid 1983 the IRIRC held a symposium on establishing a network among the refugee documentation centers already in existence. From this meeting came a proposal to form the International Refugee Documentation Network (IRDN) among the twenty organizations attending.[1] The IRIRC's role in this consortium would be to coordinate the IRDN; to build the thesaurus of refugee terminology mentioned above and distribute it to the members so that all IRDN documentation centers would be using the same indexing terminology; to locate major international documents and reports on refugees and circulate these to the members; to abstract these materials and others through Refugee Abstracts; and to compile a master list of the holdings of the member documentation centers and provide each with a current copy. In turn, the documentation centers would give the IRIRC copies of their publications; abstracts of key materials on refugees produced in their countries for publication in Refugee Abstracts; lists of other materials regarding refugees in their countries; and a list of organizations assisting refugees in their nations. The results of this agreement would be far-reaching--the entire holdings of all participating centers would be accessible in one database for online computer searching. All materials would be indexed using common terminology, making retrieval more accurate and thorough. Organizations in North America attending the Symposium were the Center for Migration Studies, New York; and the Refugee Documentation Project, Ontario, Canada.[2] Although the Documentation Network still has not become a functioning reality, the effort is a commendable one as such a network would inestimably further the cause of refugee research worldwide.

Refugee Abstracts, published by the IRIRC, is an absolute must for anyone doing research on refugees. It contains special reports; abstracts; reprints of selected news articles; reviews of new books; publishers' addresses; and announcements of conference and meetings, fellowships, and new publications. Subject indexing is detailed, and there is also an author index. Abstracts are arranged under the headings "International", "Origins", "Exodus", "Asylum", and "Resettlement". All types of works are abstracted, from books, journal articles, and dissertations to government documents, proceedings and unpublished reports. The language of each item is indicated; although most are in English, a sizable number are in French and German. The quarterly issues run over 100 pages in length.

I should stress that Refugee Abstracts is essential for current news on conferences and happenings on the refugee research and training scene, as well as for abstracts of current documentation. The December, 1983, issue contained a detailed report on the documentation network symposium discussed at length above, and notice of an annual course on Refugee Community Health Care to be held in London in June, 1984, for example. A library subscription to Refugee Abstracts is only $30 per year; to refugee-assisting organizations and individuals, just $20. As far as I can tell, using the standard library tools, the title is owned in the United States only by the Center for Migration Studies, the University of California-San Diego, the University of Washington-Seattle, and probably the Library of Congress. If you will be doing research on refugees, urge your academic library to purchase it.

At this point I am going to turn to indexes and abstracts, many better known than Refugee Abstracts, which are available in most medium to large sized academic libraries. Most scholars prefer to exhaust the resources at their nearby libraries before traveling to research centers, and indexes and abstracts are the tools they rely on most heavily. I have tried to determine which indexes and abstracts would be the most productive, and to highlight the usefulness of computerized searching of these sources.

I. INDEXES AND ABSTRACTS

A. Titles searchable by computer

There are over one hundred databases, most formerly available only as paper copy abstracts and indexes, which are now online. Included are the common ones, like Psychological Abstracts and Dissertation Abstracts, and ones which never were produced in paper format such as Population Bibliography. The advantages of a computerized literature search are many: unearthing articles dealing with refugees if "refugees" was not an entry in the paper copy subject index; the ability to combine terms and concepts much more rapidly than in a manual search (and, indeed, sometimes impossible to pair in a manual search); the time saved; the ability to search an index or abstract the library doesn't own or never could own because it is available online only; and access to the very most current information, since an online database is usually updated faster than its printed equivalent. Most academic libraries now offer the service of computerized literature searching. Usually there is a fee, based on the database searched, the time online, the phone bill, and the number of citations retrieved. A search of a social science database probably averages $8-15, but is well worth the cost in light of the advantages discussed above. I should point out that the databases are available online from central computers operated by companies known as vendors, who set pricing in cooperation with the database producer (index publisher). The library dials up the vendor's computer, is billed by the vendor, and then bills the customer.

To do a computerized literature search, the researcher needs to identify the concepts and terms central to the topic, being sure to include synonyms and descriptors if the database uses descriptors. Descriptors are subject terms assigned to articles by indexers. A schematic for a simple search on Afghan refugees would look as follows:

The diagram is based on set theory. First we retrieve all articles with the term "Afghan", "Afghanistan", or "Afghans" somewhere in the record (citation, abstract if there is one, assigned descriptors, etc). Then we retrieve all the records containing the term "refugee" or "refugees". The intersection of the two represents all articles having both terms somewhere in the record. Many searches use three sets instead of two to further define the topic. Furthermore, it is often possible to limit the output to English; to specify years of publication; or to retrieve journal articles only, as opposed to book reviews, dissertations, and other formats.

Now that I've convinced you of the merits of computer searching, I'm going to show you how I was able to use the system to determine which indexes and abstracts yield the most on the topic of "refugees". The vendor I used, DIALOG, offers a feature called "DIALINDEX" with which one can run a term against each of several databases to see how many citations containing the term are in each database.

I started with a DIALOG packaged group of files called "Pubaff", for Public Affairs. Of these databases, National Newspaper Index (File 111) had the most records containing the word "refugee" or "refugees". National Newspaper Index is equivalent to the print indexes to the New York Times, Christian Science Monitor, and Wall Street Journal 1979 to the present, and to the indexes to the Washington Post and Los Angeles Times 1982 to the present. The time saved by a computer search is obvious. The database is also available in microfilm format, but many libraries may have elected not to buy it since they already have the paper copy indexes for the separate newspapers.

The second most productive file in this group is Magazine Index, a type of Reader's Guide online, except that more journals are covered than in Reader's Guide. Magazine Index covers general interest and news periodicals such as Newsweek, Commentary, and Foreign Affairs. There is no paper copy version of Magazine Index; rather, the title is also produced on microfilm. Newsearch, File 211, here with 37 records, updates both National Newspaper Index and Magazine Index. Records are added daily and at the end of the month are transferred to the other two databases. Newsearch is thus the best source to search for the most current information. Recently, the database producer has begun to offer entire articles online as well as the citations, allowing instant access to the source materials.

PAIS, with 420 records, comes in third. As perhaps the primary index for political science and international affairs, this fact is no surprise.

PAIS indexes current periodicals, books, government documents, and pamphlets. The online PAIS includes both the English and foreign language editions, and searches can be limited by language if desired.

GPO Monthly Catalog is the basic index to United States government publications. The index is an excellent one for locating primary sources on refugees, especially agency publications like those from the Department of Health and Human Services, State Department, and Department of Education. Depository libraries for U.S. government documents are located throughout the United States. If the one nearest you does not own the publications you need, you can get them on interlibrary loan using the call numbers and bibliographic citations from your computer search.

For refugees in the Middle East, Mideast File, number 249, appears to be a rich source. It corresponds to the printed equivalent by the same name. Approximately 50% of the file is from Arabic sources, and language of publication is specified. Indexed are journals. government publications, research reports, interviews, broadcasts, dissertations, and conference proceedings. Probably only large research libraries will own the paper copy version of this index, but it is available to you online at a nearby academic library.

After I ran the "Pubaff" group I selected some other likely files to query, including ERIC, Social Scisearch, Agricola, Dissertation Abstracts, CAB Abstracts, Population Bibliography, U.S.P.S.D., CIS Index, PsycInfo, Sociological Abstracts, and Family Resources. I am only going to talk about a select few from this group; your handout gives the postings for each file. CIS Index was by far the most productive of this group. CIS Index abstracts all publications of the U.S. Congress 1970 to the present except the Congressional Record. Covered are Senate and House reports; documents; hearings, at which experts testify; and committee prints, or background studies. CIS Index is the index of choice to use for Congressional works due to its thoroughness and accuracy. Geographic range is not limited to the United States, as can be seen from the following overhead.

ERIC (Educational Resources Information Center) would also be useful for research on refugees. ERIC is an education database produced by the U.S. National Institute of Education. It abstracts two types of materials, research reports and projects (documents), which are available on microfiche at most academic libraries except the very smallest, and journal articles. The documents section does cover some U.S. government publications also distributed through the depository library system. Print equivalents to ERIC online are Resources in Education (RIE), which abstracts the documents; and Current Index to Journals in Education (CIJE), which abstracts periodical articles. I was very surprised to find ERIC the most productive for bibliographies on refugees of any index I searched--there were forty-seven! Upon further investigation I learned that one ERIC clearinghouse, Urban Studies at Teacher's College, Columbia University, focuses on refugees; and another, the Center for Applied Linguistics, has produced a considerable number of publications on teaching English as a second language. The Urban Studies clearinghouse collects documents, produces bibliographies, and writes research syntheses on refugees, all of which are entered into ERIC. As you can see from the overheads, the range of the materials on refugees in the data-base is not limited to the classroom, but treats U.S. resettlement questions of all kinds. Also picked up were Barry Stein's 1981 "Refugee Research Bibliography" from the journals; this bibliography is interdisciplinary in the social sciences and worldwide in scope. Based on these findings, I would recommend that all research on refugees include an ERIC computer search early in the process since coverage is limited neither to education nor to the United States. ERIC is also one of the least expensive databases to search online.

Social Scisearch, File 7, is a database that I should also stress, if only because of its size. Over 4000 journals and books are covered, making it the most comprehensive index in the social sciences. Many smaller academic libraries will not own the paper copy version of this database, called Social Sciences Citation Index, due to its price, but the index is accessible online and definitely should be consulted for a refugees search. Unfortunately, the online version is expensive also.

Yet another database which is a must is Population Bibliography, File 91. There is no printed equivalent to Population Bibliography, which is produced by the Carolina Population Center at the University of North Carolina. The Center has one of the largest collections in existence on population; found there are journal articles, books, documents, technical reports, dissertations, conference proceedings, and unpublished reports. Socioeconomic aspects of population are emphasized; the United States and developing countries are the regions covered. Population Bibliography indexes the Center's collection.

I'm going to talk about just one more online database, Popline, which is produced by the U.S. National Library of Medicine (NLM), in conjunction with five other institutions among which are the Office of Population, U.S. Agency for International Development; and the Office of Population Research at Princeton University.[3] Although much of the database focuses on the family planning and fertility aspects of population, citations to sources on refugees can also be found there. A wide range of materials is indexed, from journals to unpublished papers. Popline, available as one of the NLM MEDLARS databases, is best accessed through the computer search service of a medical library or a large research library. The nearest printed equivalent is Population Index, which is the portion of the database contributed by Princeton. Since Population Index has no subject index but rather a topical arrangement, and "refugees" is not one of the topics, it is necessary to search the online version.

B. Paper copy indexes and abstracts

There are a number of paper only indexes and abstracts which must be an integral part of any discussion of indexes and abstracts productive for research on refugees. Besides Refugee Abstracts, already discussed in detail above, there is UNDOC, the United Nations documents index. UNDOC is issued 10 times per year, in English, and provides comprehensive coverage of U.N. documentation. Full bibliographic information and author, title, and subject indexes comprise the index. Subject indexing on the topic of refugees is very thorough, as can be seen from the following overhead. UNDOC is online at the U.N. Library in New York, as UNBIS; in fact, UNBIS is used to produce UNDOC. As yet, however, UNBIS is not available to individual users on a regular basis.

Transdex is another tool that shoud be consulted. The paper copy index, produced by Bell and Howell, accesses the source documents, a microfiche collection of selected foreign language journal and newspaper articles translated into English by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency. The items selected for inclusion basically are those of interest to the CIA; scope is global. No doubt material can be found here which is totally unavailable elswhere, or at least extremely difficult to access otherwise. For example, I looked up three recent entries on refugees--they were from a Beijing newspaper, the Islamabad newspaper the Muslim, and the Bangkok Post. Larger academic libraries which are U.S. government documents depositories will own the Transdex microfiche.

Don't forget the old standby, Social Science Index, formerly Social Sciences and Humanities Index and before that the International Index. This is one of the very basic indexes in the social sciences. It covers approximately 265 scholarly periodicals, and is published quarterly. Everyone here is no doubt well versed in the use of this tool.

ABC-POL SCI is also productive. It comes out every two months, more often than many paper indexes, and includes some publications not indexed elsewhere. The permuterm subject index uses title keywords with additional terms (geographic, for example) added by the indexers to enhance retrieval. With this index one can very easily restrict a search to bibliographies or films since document type terms are entered under a subject. Scope is international.

Two other useful indexes, Political Science Abstracts and Business Index, I won't discuss here, but keep them in mind. Also remember that there are now three exceptional statistics indexes for locating data published by the United Nations, the United States, and U.S. state governments and private organizations. These are the International Statistics Index (ISI), the American Statistics Index (ASI), and the Statistical Reference Index (SRI), respectively. ASI Is also available online.

II. BIBLIOGRAPHIES

Listed below are bibliographies primarily published since 1980, although all bibliographies from the ERIC database have been included regardless of date as have been a few other bibliographies published prior to 1980. Citations to additional recent bibliographies can be found in Refugee Abstracts, of which I examined only volume 2, number 4, December, 1983.

CENTER FOR MIGRATION STUDIES (CMS)
LIBRARY
209 Flagg Place
Staten Island, NY 10304
(212)-351-8800

A nonprofit, independent research organization which publishes the journals International Migration Review and Migration Today. The Center engages in research on practically all aspects of human migration and ethnic group relations--social, demographic, economic, historical, political, pastoral, legislative. Geographic scope is global. Research results are disseminated through books, professional journals, pamphlets, and research updates. Another activity of the Center is the sponsorship of the annual Conference on Immigration and Refugee Policy. CMS' library has one of the most substantial collections on refugees in the United States. It actively collects everything on refugees, including books, periodicals, documents, dissertations, abstracts, and ephemera. CMS maintains liaison with organizations worldwide which are involved with the refugee effort; and in the Library one can find active collections of working papers and preprints, some never published, for approximately 80 of these organizations. Included are UNHCR and the International Labor Office. This collection, called the Series Division, is mostly uncataloged (25% is cataloged), and is arranged and accessed by name of organization. Another special collection of the library is the papers of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, which assisted refugees after World War II.

The Library is open to the public. Diana Zimmerman, Librarian, can be contacted for information on the Library's holdings. There is not sufficient staff to provide research services, however.

REFUGEE DATA CENTER
200 Park Avenue South
New York, NY 10003
(212)-777-5400

Originally under the American Council of Voluntary Agencies for Foreign Service, the Refugee Data Center is now a separate entity associated with the U.S. Department of State. The Center keeps track of cases from the time of leaving refugee camps until time of arrival in the United States, and publishes a regular City-State Report on cases expected in the near future in each state. This report is distributed to each state's coordinator. The Center maintains data on Indochinese refugees mid-1977 to the present and on refugees of all origins approximately 1981 to the present. In the past two years statistics on education, occupation, and language ability have been kept. The data is available in bound volumes; specialized computer searches can also be generated. To arrange to visit the Refugee Data Center, contact the Center in advance, and it will assist in applying to the State Department for the necessary permission.

REFUGEE MATERIALS CENTER (RMC)
U.S. Department of Education, Regional Office 7
324 E. 11th St., 9th Floor
Kansas City, MO 64106
(816)-374-2276

In existence five years, the RMC serves as a clearinghouse for materials dveloped throughout the United States for teaching English as a second language and working with refugee families. Publications, which are paper copy, are free to teachers and service providers. The Center puts out an annual bibliography of its holdings, called the RMC Bibliography, which also is free of charge (The RMC Bibliography can be found in ERIC as well). Over 24,000 individuals and organizations, including libraries, have acquired RMC publications. One method the Center gathers new material is by annual solicitation from those on its mailing list. ESL sources at the Center focus primarily on Southeast Asian refugees, although there are some materials for teaching Polish, Korean, and Russian refugees. Holdings on Afghan refugees are very limited. Also included in the collection are research reports, for example those of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Office of Refugee Resettlement, and writings on cultures of origin. To have your name placed on RMC's mailing list, write to the above address.

REFUGEE POLICY GROUP (RPG)
1424 16th St. NW, Suite 401
Washington, DC 20036
(202)-387-3015

Private non-profit association, funded by the Ford and Edna McConnell Clark Foundations, whose purpose is to serve as an independent research and policy analysis center on domestic and international refugee issues. RPG aims to further research on refugee issues by sponsoring symposia, publishing occasional papers, and providing auspices for researchers to conduct their work while in Washington, D.C. Also maintains a library containing files of materials about and by organizations in the U.S. such as the U.S. Committee on Refugees, Afghan Relief Committee, and American Near East Refugee Aid. Collects newsletters of these organizations. Other library holdings are statistics, U.S. government publications, journals, and RPG publications. Collection is international in scope and open to scholars.

UNITED NATIONS HEADQUARTERS
DAG HAMMERSKJOLD LIBRARY
United Nations Plaza
New York, NY 10017
(212)-754-7443

Holdings are U.N. documents and other books, periodicals, documents, and print materials of interest to the United Nations. Volumes, 380,000; periodicals, 8000. Maintains a computer database, UNBIS, which can be used for subject access to the Library's collection. (The UN documents index, UNDOC, is a paper copy subset of UNBIS). Since the United Nations operates a depository system, with satellite libraries located throughout the United States, researchers are encouraged to consult their nearest depository library before contacting the Dag Hammerskjold Library. The Library is available on a restricted basis to researchers not affiliated with the United Nations; passes are given for a limited period of time and are best obtained in advance. Scholars may or may not be allowed access to UNBIS as a policy has yet to be firmed up.

U.S. BUREAU OF THE CENSUS
CENTER FOR INTERNATIONAL RESEARCH
Washington, D.C. 20233
(301)-763-2870

The Center for International Research keeps a data file containing time series data 1950 to the present for number of refugees in each country and country of origin of these refugees. Developed countries are not included. Statistics are collected from such sources as UNHCR, U.S. Department of State, country statistical offices, and newspapers. The Center does not publish this data; it can be obtained from the Center free for the first 10 tables and 25¢ per table beyond ten. The Center hopes to expand coverage on refugees to include socioeconomic characteristics and possibly projections.

U.S. COMMITTEE FOR REFUGEES (USCR)
20 W. 40th St.
New York, NY 10018
(212)-398-9142

The public information division of the American Council for Nationalities Service. Although not a research center open to the public, the USCR does have a significant publication program with much of its output available free of charge or at nominal cost. The authoritative World Refugee Survey, an annual, is one of Committee's publications; annual subscription price is $5. Archives of the U.S. Committee itself are available at the Refugee Policy Group in Washington, D.C.

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA
CAROLINA POPULATION CENTER (CPC)
Library
University Square, 123 W. Franklin St.
Chapel Hill, NC 27514
(919)-962-3081

Labeled the largest population library in the world in 1978, the CPC library collects books, periodicals, documents, technical reports, conference proceedings, dissertations, and unpublished papers 1967 to the present on the socioeconomic aspects of population and family planning. The focus is on the developing countries and the United States, and the collection is worthwhile for research on refugees. The Library contains over 65,000 items, with approximately 1000 new records being entered twice a month. The catalog of the Library's holdings is searchable by computer via the DIALOG system (Population Bibliography, File 91.) The Library's collections is accessible through interlibrary loan or an on-site visit.

second section discusses the refugee policies of ASEAN countries, which include most of the first-asylum countries. Technically, Indo-Chinese refugees are regarded as 'illegal immigrants' and they are only given temporary asylum on the understanding that they will eventually be resettled elsewhere. The final section examines alternative approaches. The author argues that the Orderly Departure Programme should be expanded and that new arrivals should have to establish their refugee status under the UN Refugee Convention (1951). Finally, the political situation in South-East Asia is analysed, with particular reference to the possibilities of co-operation between the countries of origin and of asylum.

TOWARDS THE SELF-RELIANCE OF AFGHAN REFUGEES? A STUDY OF THE NEED AND FEASIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING INCOME-GENERATING AND SKILL-TRAINING PROGRAMMES FOR AFGHAN REFUGEES IN PAKISTAN, PARTICULARLY WITH A VIEW TO WOMEN. Boesen, I.W.; Copenhagen, Danish Refugee Council, 1983. 84 p. (eng).

This report discusses income-generating projects for Afghan refugees in Pakistan. It is based on a field study in the North-West Frontier Province, primarily in Baghchicha Camp, and focusses on the situation of refugee women. After a brief description of the causes of the Afghan refugee exodus, the general situation in Pakistan is considered, covering such aspects as: settlement patterns; living conditions; food; housing; household equipment; schools and mosques; domestic energy; water; heath care; sanitation; relief; ethnic groups; and, occupations. The results of the author's research study in the Baghchicha Camp are then analysed and there is also a section on current skills and income-generating activities in the refugee communities. The report concludes that most refugees, being agriculturalists and pastoralists, cannot practise their traditional livelihoods. Women are particularly disavantaged since Afghan traditions emphasise domestic and agricultural activities. The author recommends the following income-generating activities: kitchen gardens; bee-keeping; animal husbandry; ready-made garments; knitted garments; embroidery; and, kelim-weaving. He argues that the programmes should be decentralized and should not be based in production centres. Finally he outlines a specific income-generating project for Afghan refugee women.

REVIEW '82. League of Red Cross Societies. Geneva, LORCS, 1983. 32 p. (eng).

In 1982, the League of Red Cross Societies expended more than 178 million Swiss francs on 64 relief operations. This annual report summarises the League's activities during 1982. The league co-ordinates the activities of 130 national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies concerning relief operations for the victims of natural disasters and for refugees outside areas of conflict. There is a statistical analysis of relief operations by country, type of disaster, number affected and programme costs. The League also operates a development programme aimed at strengthening the operational capacities of national Red Cross societies, particularly in the Third World. Details of the development projects and their costs are given. Other League activities include disaster preparedness, primary health care, social welfare, blood transfusion and youth programmes. Information on the sources of funding and on the League's partners is also given.

KEYWORDS: international; Red Cross; annual reports; natural disasters.

AB - "A model of refugee resettlement containing two axes is proposed: volume of refugee intake and emphasis on economic or cultural adaptation." The refugee resettlement practices of Canada, France, and the United States are then described. The author notes that France and Canada favor a moderate intake of refugees with emphasis on economic adaptation, although the emphasis in Quebec is on cultural adaptation. In contrast, the United States accepts a large volume of refugees, with a similar emphasis on economic adaptation.

INTER-AFRICAN AFFAIRS

'PRECARIOUS EXISTENCE' OF REFUGEES IN AFRICA EXAMINED

Verona NIGRIZIA in Italian Nov 83 pp 25-36

[Article by Ian Linden: "Peoples Adrift." Ian Linden is a former lecturer on African history at Hamburg University (GDR). He is the author of "The Catholic Church and the Struggle for Zimbabwe," and of "Church and Revolution in Rwanda."]

> [Text] One of every two of the world's refugees is African. That is almost 5 million people, many of them women, old people, and little children.-- rootless, landless-- the central fact of whose precarious existence is not knowing what tomorrow may bring. Efforts on their behalf by international agencies have often proved effective in dire emergencies, but the urgent need now is for new strategies, for approaches slanted toward development rather than welfare, toward political solutions rather than toward the "refugee industry." The Church has thus far managed to devote only minimal attention to these poorest of the poor, being still too fast-bound to its overly rigid and unalterable structures. We are left with the testimony of those who are sharing -- under conditions it would be euphemism to call uncomfortable -- the lot of these dispossessed peoples.

One refugee in two, worldwide, is African. It is possible to count only those who live in organized camps: these people's numbers were reckoned at the beginning of the Eighties, at 3.5 million. More than 60 percent of them, however, live outside the camps, mingling with the local population. The 5 million African refugees are the equivalent of the entire population of a small African country. So what we have here is a dispossessed nation which shares the culture of the dispossessed: a challenge to any church that has seriously taken the side of the poor.
